ABSTRACT

To produce a publication which would introduce the rural and community development practitioner to a wide range of information sources, Community Resource Development Agents and Specialists in 12 northeast states were asked to list and annotate those publications and audiovisual materials which they used in their educational programs. To concentrate on educational materials which had already been found useful in conducting programs in the field, an effort was made to exclude material which was solely research-oriented or for development specialists only. It was not specified that entries should be either in-state or regional in nature, or that they should be produced solely within extension or the land-grant system. Entries are arranged categorically as follows: general and miscellaneous, growth and development, community services, housing, land use, natural resources, and community development processes and strategies. Individual entries are comprised of the title, institutional source, program or service, date, format, length, cost, audience, ordering address, key words, and a brief description or summary. The cross index is based on the key words provided as part of the annotation for each entry, as well as on the media format for non-print materials. Publication dates for the more than 400 entries range from 1948 to 1977 with the majority falling in the 1970's. Suggestions for other bibliographies to consult are given as well as a listing of independent information sources. (BR)

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS:

Many people contributed to the bibliography project. We would particularly like to thank the following people: Dorothy Freed, Dorothy Messenger, and Lynn Morman for secretarial support, and Mary H. Osgood (Pennsylvania State University), Delmar Yoder (West Virginia University), Edmond E. Seay (University of Rhode Island), Silas B. Weeks (University of New Hampshire), Bruce W. Sorter (University of Maryland), Nancy P. Weiss (University of Connecticut), and George McDowell (University of Massachusetts) for their invaluable assistance in gathering the information on which the bibliography is based.

INTRODUCTION

We set out to produce a publication which would introduce the rural and community development practitioner to a wide range of information sources. It proved impossible to compile a comprehensive bibliography; the fields of interest were vast and without clear boundaries. What subject, after all, is not relevant to community development? And new publications are appearing all the time. We hope that this publication will be a good starting place.

To obtain the entries in the bibliography, we asked Community Resource Development Agents and Specialists in twelve Northeast states to list and annotate those publications and audiovisual materials which they used in their educational programs. The intention was to exclude material which was solely research-oriented or for development specialists only, and concentrate on educational materials which had already been found useful in conducting programs in the field. No specifications were made that entries should be either in-state or regional in nature, or that they should be produced solely within extension or the land-grant system.

We were concerned that the bibliography should not duplicate existing collections. In general, we have found that there is not significant overlap. The excellent catalog of the Community Resource Development Library, coordinated for the Northeast Extension Publications Committee by Russell Smith at Rutgers University, should also be consulted.

Many of the publications in the bibliography are bulletins applicable to only one state. They may be useful, however, as models for similar publications in other states. Their authors may be good sources of information on the subject area involved. Not all of the entries are totally up to date; we hope that they will be useful as a starting point to help in tracking down current materials.

An exceptional bibliography on youth-community development compiled by Linda Fortunato and others at the University of Connecticut was utilized for many entries. The bibliography is now out of print. Since youth-community development is an important component of the overall community development strategy, and many of the materials were originally produced for adult audiences, it was decided to combine the entries with those obtained from other sources. The entries are annotated with the keyword "4H"; this does not mean that they would not be useful for other audiences.

Also included in the bibliography is a separate section on information sources outside the land-grant and USDA system. These are generally independent non-profit organizations or associations, funded by foundations, government agencies, publication sales or membership dues. They can be good sources of materials, ideas, or basic information on community development topics from a variety of perspectives.

For materials from federal agencies, try Dan Kuennen's U.S. Government Printing Office Publications Useful for Rural Development (page 6), or write directly to the appropriate agency or the G.P.O. Audiovisual materials should be handled by the National Audiovisual Center, (G.S.A., Washington, D.C. 20409), but some agencies seem to hoard the more special audience items.

USING THE BIBLIOGRAPHY

The bibliograhy can be used in a number of different ways. You can browse through the different sections, focus on a subject area, or pick out a specific topic or combination of topics.

The material submitted was broken down in the following categories:

General and Miscellaneous includes material on the general topic of rural development.

Growth & Development includes economic development and population growth, and the impacts of each.

Community Services includes material on public services and facilities in the community, including health, education, water, sewer, solid waste, recreation, etc.

Housing includes entries which relate housing to the community as a whole, such as moble home park siting, community planning, subdivisions, rental housing, etc.

Land Use is one of the largest sections, including both general and technical materials on such issues as agricultural preservation, zoning and flood control.

Natural Resources contains references on air and water pollution, energy, ecology, watershed protection, and so forth.

Community Development Processes and Strategies includes educational materials on the techniques involved in the community development process - citizen participation, meeting management, program planning, grantsmanship, leadership development, value clarification, etc.

The Cross Index (beginning on page 88) is based on the key words provided as part of the annotation for each entry, as well as on the media format for non-print materials. The title of a particular entry will be listed in the Cross Index under each key word which appears in the annotation with a few general exceptions: 1) If a key word is also a subject area, entries which are originally listed in a particular subject area section will not be listed under that subject area as a key word in the Cross Index; 2) Several key words which are difficult to distinguish from subject area categories, eg., conservation, environment (when found in the "Natural Resources" section), land use policy (when found in the "Land Use" section) will also not be listed. Non-print materials will be listed under the particular format (films, slides, etc.) as well as their keywords.

If you have a specific topic in mind, look for an appropriate key word on page 87. Look up the key word in the Cross Index and scan the available titles. Note the page number of titles which interest you and find them in the subject area sections. In the right-hand margin are page numbers for suggested independent information sources.

If you are looking for materials which relate two different subject areas, such as local government and land use, you should look up "Land Use" first, run you finger down the column of abbreviations on the left until you find "LG". Note the page numbers of the entries listed. Then look up "Local Government" and find the entries with "LU" in the left margin.

If you want to find an audiovisual program on a particular subject, such as natural resources, look up the desired format, (eg. "film") in the Cross Index. Run down the left margin to find "N"; note the page numbers of entries listed.

Resources in the last section, Independent Information Sources, are not annotated or given key words. However, an abbreviation and page number in parentheses to the right of the key words in the Index will suggest where to look in the independent sources section for potentially useful materials.

KEY TO ANNOTATION

Below is the layout for the annotated entries in the bibliography. All of the information indicated was not available or appropriate for each item; in such cases the annotation was telescoped to save space.

TITLE

Credits Program or Service

Date Format Length Cost Audience

Address to order

Key words

Brief description or summary

"Audience" was coded in three categories - Youth (Y), Adult (A), and Professional (P). We defined "professional" as a selected audience with previous technical background in the subject matter - planners, experienced local government officials, development agents, etc. Of course, many items don't fit into such easy categories; use the notation as a suggestion only.

The brief descriptions of each item were submitted by respondents in most cases; others were excerpted from abstracts or bibliographies; several were written by the editor if a copy of the material was available.

Local government, community services

The report summarizes results of a 1975-76 survey of township officials. Although township expenditures had tripled over the preceding decade, local officials expressed broad concerns for increased services to their communities. Major among these were improved water systems for fire fighting; sewage treatment plants and collections systems; environmental control-littering, roadside dumping, abandoned vehicles, flooding, and stream pollution; indoor recreational programs for youth and senior citizens; improved health care services; and aid to the poor and disabled. Three-fourths indicated only limited knowledge of available state and federal assistance to local governments but a large majority favored continuation and expansion of federal revenue sharing for local governments.

Land use, agricultural preservation

Productive agricultural lands once taken over by urban development cannot be reclaimed. Agricultural supports large agri-business industries and farms now require large capital investments. Sharing of farm lands with urban development is seldom carried on sensibly. Local governments must plan for housing developments, highways, transportation routes, utilities, and industrial developments which will not cut through the best farm lands.

The major objective of this report is to evaluate the impact of land use statutes relating to the use of natural resources for the orderly development of rural areas. The primary emphasis is on legislation affecting agricultural land, though other significant land use statutes are included. The discussion includes the historical background, provisions and administration of each law. Major land use proposals and issues are also discussed.

Oregon State U., CES, Land Resource Mgmnt. Program, Dept. of Geography, OSU, Corvallis, OR 93331

Land use policy, performance standards, growth, environment

> Traditionally, public control of land use has been dominated by use zoning and lot dimension requirements. The use of performance standards approaches the problem of controlling land use from a different angle. Performance standards are based on measurements of the effects of performance of land use activities. Performance criteria include emissions, traffic generation, development intensity, visual performance, economic impact, and performance related to land capability. Neighborhood characteristics and environmental carrying capacity are base levels for setting performance standards. Experiences with performance approaches to land use control in six communities are briefly reviewed. Advantages and disadvantages to the performance approach are discussed.

  Land use policy, open space preservation, urbanization, easements

  There are 3 basic parts to this paper. First, the general rationale for the use of easements as a tool of open space planning is developed, to include the characteristics of urbanization, the need for public action, and examples of public action in other states. Secondly, NY's previous efforts at providing open space are explored briefly. Thirdly, the uses and potential of NY's Open Space Easement Law, Section 247 of General Municipal Law, are explored in some detail. The author's recommendations for increasing the use of this law are presented. Primary focus is on provision or retention of open space in urbanizing areas, or at the urban fringe, and not in urban centers.

- COMMUNITY DEVELOPMENT - A LOOK AT PAST, PRESENT AND FUTURE

  Kresse, E.; White, Donald

  Jan. 1973 multi-media Y

  Coop. Ext. Assoc. of Oneida County, 1 Oxford Rd., New Hartford, NY 13413

  Community development, land use, public participation

  A multimedia course package for high school students including teachers guide, materials and exercises.

  Communities throughout Oneida County, NYS, continue to undergo change - from outside sources and from decisions made by elected and appointed community officials. Planning is one key to the successful solution of many community problems.

  The students in our high school today are the potential leaders of their community in the years ahead. Presently little is being done on an organized, prepared basis to help these students appreciate and understand the community development process.

  The purpose of the community development kit and it's use by teachers within the school curriculum is to hopefully help the students: 1) More clearly understand community problems and opportunities; 2) Become more knowledgeable of the community development process; and 3) Become more active participants in their own community.

THE AMERICAN HOSPITAL ASSOCIATION

The American Hospital Association produces an impressive array of publications, educational programs, and educational materials related to the management and operation of hospital facilities. Although not focused on rural concerns, much of their material might be especially valuable for small hospitals or clinics with growing pains or administrative problems.

THE AMERICAN INSTITUTE OF PLANNERS

The American Institute of Planners is definitely urban-oriented; "regional" is the closest they get to "rural", although many of the problems and issues are the same, and many planners in small communities and rural areas are de facto involved in rural and community development. AIP is a professional society, and most of its publication effort is aimed at the professional planner.

CENTER FOR COMMUNITY CHANGE

The Center for Community Change distributes a number of publications prepared by themselves or under contract to other organizations. Their focus is on federal programs which provide aid to low-income urban and rural communities for community development projects.

Monitor is the monthly "Federal Programs Information Service" of the Center for Community Change. It provides an overview of current events in Washington and elsewhere with regard to such programs as CETA, Community Development Block Grants, Local Public Works Employment Act, General Revenue Sharing, etc.; agencies such as EDA, CSA, FHA, HUD, etc.; and other issues and programs affecting low-income people and communities.

THE COUNCIL OF STATE GOVERNMENTS

The Council of State Governments "is a joint agency of all the state governments - created, supported and directed by them. It conducts research on state programs and problems; maintains an information service available to state agencies, officials and legislators; issues a variety of publications; assists in state - federal liaison; promotes regional and state-local cooperation and provides staff for affiliated organizations".

CSG publications, because of their audience, tend to be concerned with state-level legislative and administrative solutions to problems. Thus they may be particularly interesting in the case of a problem area with significant state government involvement, either through programs or regulation. The focus in general is not exclusively either rural or urban.

COMMISSION ON RURAL WATER -
NATIONAL DEMONSTRATION WATER PROJECT

The National Demonstration Water Project began as a demonstration project to bring needed sanitary services to low-income rural residents in five Virginia Counties, funded by the Office of Economic Opportunity. It now works with affiliate projects in eight states, as well as operating at the national level in designing and testing organizational models, disseminating information, etc.

The Commission on Rural Water is an outgrowth of NDWP's national program. It is an advisory body with a membership of national and local groups concerned with problems of rural water. It publishes NDWP-generated manuals and information as well as the newsletter, Rural Water News.

ENVIRONMENTAL POLICY INSTITUTE

"The Environmental Policy Institute is an independent research organization...which directs studies of critical energy and natural resource policy issues to provide reliable, objective resource data and analysis for use by government, industry, and citizen's groups. EPI... gathers information about the environmental, economic, and social impacts of energy, water resources, and land-use management proposals... The Environmental Policy Institute also supports research by local and regional organizations, to encourage more accurate analyses of the regional impacts of national resource policies."

Rather technical, EPI reports are nevertheless aimed at some very important issues with implications for rural areas (e.g., strip mining, energy facilities sites, water for industry).

THE INTERNATIONAL CITY MANAGEMENT ASSOCIATION

The International City Management Association is one of the big organizations in the field. Well-established, with a large membership and staff, ICMA produces an impressive amount of activity in terms of publications, training courses and materials, and conferences. The material is aimed at city and town managers, which means that it is very practically-oriented and covers an extremely wide range of subject and problem areas. Emphasis is on small-to-large cities with some attention to small town problems.

Out of the complex of programs made available by ICMA (at the cost of various dues, fees, subscriptions, etc.), there are two which offer materials of interest, and are included here with the general publications list. The Management Information Service offers monthly reports on a variety of subjects of practical interest in the city management field. These are available for $5.00 each. The Institute for Training in Municipal Administration takes the "Green Book" texts and builds correspondence courses around them, with study guides and supplementary material.
